

EDINBURGH
STEINER SCHOOL

Ximena Rohde

I am originally from Chile and a Veterinary Surgeon graduate. After having children of my own I decided to become a full-time mother and it is through my children that I discovered Steiner Education. Seeing this education work wonders on my own children, made me eager to learn more about it. When my youngest daughter started Class 1, I felt ready for a formal commitment in education and I enrolled in the Edinburgh Steiner Teaching Course (ESTEC). After registering with the GTCS I became a teacher at Edinburgh Steiner School, teaching a variety of subjects including Crafts, Maths, and Chemistry.

In a world where instant gratification, same day deliveries, and online meetings are abundant, it seems to me that the type of education we provide for our children is more relevant today than it has ever been before. A balanced education, that targets the physical body, the mind, and the emotions, develops whole individuals; individuals that are confident, capable, and able to think outside the box.

During the last few years, I have discovered a passion for education that was asleep in me. I particularly enjoy teaching sciences, maths, handwork, history, and storytelling.

I only ever attended mainstream school, and although I did well academically, I never enjoyed learning. Most, if not all, of the learning I did at school was oriented at passing exams, never at enriching my own life experience. My school experience has made me value even more an education in which children grow in all aspects of their lives and not just academically.
